Money and finance

Task 1 (page 1, ex. A)

2) I try to keep track of my own expenses, including checking prices in several stores before buying something relatively expensive. I rarely check the change I receive in stores, as I mostly pay for all purchases with a card, but I always look at the cost of the goods in the receipt. I always use my own funds, because I don't like to be beholden to anyone. That's why I don't have any credit cards. However, despite being careful about expenses, I never check bills at cafes and restaurants.

3) As I said earlier, I try to take care of my finances, which is why I rarely give money to beggars, and I have never donated money to charity. However, every year I get more and more unnecessary things that I feel sorry to throw away because of their good condition, so I give them to my friends, and what is no longer usable, for example, old equipment, I give for recycling.

4) Paying the bill when going to some cafe with someone I don't know well is an interesting question. I try to follow this principle: if we go to lunch on my initiative, because I need to discuss something with a person, for example, then I pay the bill in full. If the initiative is his, then accordingly he pays the bill in full. And if there is such a situation that this lunch trip is necessary for both of us, then the best solution would be to pay the bill in half or in those parts that correspond to the cost of what each of us ate.

Video 10 things I learned after losing a lot of money

1) What happened to the lady?

Dorothy Loorbach faced significant financial losses, which became a turning point in her life. Trying to succeed again in the standard ways, she faced difficulties that forced her to reconsider her views on money, value and stability, including paying attention to the real values in her life. Through this experience, she took a fresh look at self-esteem and the importance of financial literacy, which led her to take a more conscious and balanced approach to both her finances and self-realization.

2) What are 10 things that she discovered?

- Money is important
- Money equals time
- Money equals value
- What people say doesn't matter
- What people say matters
- It's really simple
- It's not that easy
- Being broke sucks
- Stay broke
- Money is not important

3) Choose 3 pieces of advice you enjoyed the most. Why did you like them?

This text highlights 10 basic tips, each of which has its own meaning, but the most interesting in my opinion are the following four: money is important, money equals time, money equals value and money is not important. At first glance, the first and last judgments contradict each other, but this is not the case. I liked the way the heroine presents them. It shows that money is really needed to fulfill your daily needs, but for happiness you do not need money at all, but time, from where the other two points appear. You need to understand that when you earn money, you waste your own time, thereby overworking, you lose the opportunity to be yourself. Where does the remaining point come from, that you always need to remember about your own value, about things more valuable than a couple of extra bills in your wallet. This can include a family, a hobby or a banal vacation, because non-compliance with such a concept as "Work life balance" will not make you richer, but only worsen other aspects of your life.
